

Abstract

The invention relates to integrated circuit package devices including at least two component chips. In particular the invention describes such devices having a transformer provided between the two components chips, the transformer providing isolation between the component chips and wherein the total assembly is sufficiently small that it can be integrated in standard IC packages.